DUKE DE REICHSTADT.

The recently published journal of Mr. Chas. Greville furnishes some interesting particulars regarding the son of Napoleon I. which were communicated to the author by Prince Esterhazy. It is well known that the ill-fated Duke of Reichstadt died of consumption at the early age of twenty-one, and the idea has been generally entertained that the physical feebleness which he suffered through all his life was accompanied by a corresponding weakness of mind. Later historians, however, escaping from the prejudices that affected the contemporaries of Napoleon I. have corrected this impression, declaring that the boy possessed a vigorous intellect, with great intensity of feeling, and that, had his life been prolonged, he would undoubtedly have played a conspicuous part in the world's history. This opinion is corroborated by the evidence of Prince Esterhazy, who says the Duke was gifted with uncommon talents and possessed a towering ambition. He adored the name of his father, and resented with bitterness the indifference with which Maria Louisa regarded the fate of the Emperor, by whom her shallow nature had never been deeply stirred.

The Duke evinced great affection and gratitude for his grandfather, Franz I. who endowed him with the state and revenues of an Austrian prince, and had him tenderly reared and highly educated. Although the Kaiser scrupulously observed his obligations to Louis Philippe, he secretly admired the genius and ambition which the son had inherited from Napoleon. The boy delighted in military exercises, and had his father's art of ingratiating himself with the soldiers, who had held him as their idol. His thoughts were incessantly upon France, and he poured day and night over the history of the Emperor's splendid career. When he heard of the flight of Louis XVIII. he exclaimed, with poignant regret, "Why was I not there to take my chance?"

A single anecdote repeated by Esterhazy shows that the absorbing passion of the Duke's soul overpowered all the propensities of his age. He was to make his first appearance in public at a ball at Lady Cowley's (to which he had shown great anxiety to go), and was waiting with impatience to amuse himself with dancing and flirting with the beauties he had admired in the prater. He went, but there he met two French marshals—Marmont and Mison. He had no eyes or ears but for them; from time to time he gave the next morning he devoted himself to these marshals and conversed with them without ceasing. Though he knew well enough all the odium that attached to Marmont, he said to him that he was too happy for having the opportunity of making the acquaintance of one who had been among his father's earliest companions, and who could tell him so many interesting details of his earlier days. Marmont subsequently either did give, or was to give him, lessons in strategy.

THE TOMB OF THE AUTHOR OF FRA DIAVOLO.—After paying our annual visit to the tomb of Mue. D'Abraham and Ay Scheffer, where I again saw the two modest pots of flowers placed by some timid hand upon the threshold, I went to see about the tomb of Auber. A short time ago we were shocked to hear that the great composer was still lying in a vault belonging to an undertaker, and for which so much per month was to be paid. As Auber left a fortune which can be counted by millions, every one asked what sort of kindred it was that he left behind him upon earth. And since the monthly stipend had not been paid, one asks why it is that Auber's remains are thus left in pawn. F. W. indeed, could believe the story true. It was regarded as another invention of the reporters. But it is strictly true. The common crowd stands in a circle at the end of the grand avenue; on the end is a tomb and a recumbent figure of Godfrey Cavagnac; opposite, on the right, is a large tomb, on which is graven the words, "Sepulture provisoire." And lower down we read: "Caveau provisoire, No. 15, appartenant à M. Camuset, marbrier." Here, arranged in tiers upon the shelves, are many coffins. You enter by an iron gate, open on this day, and find the interior very simple. There are twelve coffins, composed of pearls or of yellow immortelles, upon the altar, upon one of which, in black letters, one reads, "To my mother;" on another, "To my son." These are the usual cheap traditional offerings. Everything is simple and cheap about the tomb of M. Camuset, because it is here the people leave their dead when they do not want them buried in common ground and can not pay for a concession a perpetuity, but who manage to eke out the stipend due each month for the rent of the last resting place of their dead. At the back is a pile of cords, shovels, bits of wood, and other things, showing that the undertaker, Camuset, uses this as a sort of storehouse for his tools. And beneath this pile of wood and rope sleeps the great Auber. Honorable merchants, rich, but without fame, have castles here for monuments. Upon them are statues, busts, palms, marble crosses, or allegorical figures, the arms of the family or the family name, but the author of "Fra Diavolo," the "Don Juan," and other enduring works, has not even a grave of his own. His name does not appear, but above his remains, registered under a certain name, is the name of the great "Camuset undertaker." But this shocking state of things is about to be repaired, to the shame of Auber's heirs, be it said, by public subscription. Some of the composer's friends have already guaranteed the sum necessary to purchase a monument, upon which will be placed a statue of Cleopatra. I do not know the real history of this affair, but I am told that Auber was no poorer dead than his heirs pined upon his rich estate, quarrelled among themselves, went to law, got out writ after writ, interdiction after interdictum, and meantime left the composer's remains in the vault of "Camuset, the undertaker."—Paris Cor. N. Y. Times.

"N. W. George, you must divide the cake honorably with your brother Charles." "What is honorable, mother?" "It means that you must give him the largest piece." "Then, mother, I'd rather Charley should divide it."

The Symptoms of Liver Complaint are uneasiness and pain in the side. Sometimes the pain is in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness, bowels in general constive, sometimes alternating with lax. The head is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation, considerable loss of memory, accompanied with painful eructation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. Often complaining of weakness, debility, and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the Liver is generally the organ most involved.

The Montpelier Female Humane Association, chartered by the Legislature of Virginia and the Circuit Court of Orange county, proposes, by a series of Grand Gift Concerts, to establish and endow a "Home for the Old, Infirm and Destitute Ladies of Virginia," at Montpelier, the former residence of President Jas. Madison. The Association is under the control of eight trustees, six of whom are elected bi-annually by the stockholders and two appointed by the Governor of Virginia.

References by permission: His Excellency, James L. Smith, Governor of Virginia; His Excellency, Gilbert C. Walker, ex-Gov. of Va.; Hon. Robert E. Withers, Lieutenant Governor of Virginia and U. S. Senator elect; Hon. Robt. W. Hughes, Judge Eastern District of Virginia; Senators and Members of Congress from Virginia.

Governor's Office, Richmond, July 3, '74. It affords me pleasure to say that I am well acquainted with a large majority of the officers of the Montpelier Female Humane Association who reside in the vicinity of my home, and I attest their intelligence and their worth and high reputation as gentlemen, as well as the public confidence, influence and substantial means liberally represented among them.

Alexandria, Va., July 8th, 1874.
My personal acquaintance with a majority of the gentlemen controlling the Montpelier Female Humane Association and the reputation of all of them enables me to commend them as fully entitled to the confidence of the public. No act or representation inconsistent with honor and integrity need be apprehended in the conduct or representations of these gentlemen.
